Mr. Rahul Gangal

Rahul Gangal is a partner at Roland Berger. He leads the Industrial Products (including Aerospace and Defence) and Automotive practice of Roland Berger in Canada.

Roland Berger, founded in 1967, is top 5 global strategy consultancy and the only one of European origin. With 2,400 employees working in 35 countries, Roland Berger advises major international industry and service companies as well as public institutions. Its services cover the entire range of management consulting from strategic advice to successful implementation: e.g. new leadership and business models; innovative processes and services; M&A, private equity and restructuring; and management support on large projects." In Canada, Roland Berger has a very strong experience and exposure in the Aerospace and Defence domain having worked with and advised some of the leading firms in the sector.

Rahul has nearly two decades of experience across Industry, Private Equity and Consulting. He has worked across North America, Europe and Asia with a large number of the world's leading conglomerates and businesses, both as an employee as well as a strategic advisor. His areas of focus include strategic topics for discrete manufacturing industries and internationalization of the aerospace and defence business. In his professional journey, he has looked at the Aerospace and Defence business as a business manager, investor and advisor and thus brings a multi-faceted and unique view on the challenges and future evolution of this business.

Rahul has an educational background in Economics, International Trade and Business from notable institutions like the Indian Institute of Foreign Trade and the Harvard Business School. He lives in Toronto with his family and can be contacted at Rahul.Gangal@rolandberger.com .
